is a speaker, author, coach and award-winning storyteller with an Irish wit and a passion for helping people improve their speaking and presentation skills so they can get noticed and get promoted. An engineer, he struggled to overcome a speaking anxiety that was tripping him up at work. He wholeheartedly threw himself into learning how to speak effectively and find ways to build success through outstanding presentations. Today, he helps all kinds of people particularly employees who deal with technical material communicate better and reap the rewards. He wants to share what hes learned with you. Dave was born and raised in Ireland. He became Chief Engineer Officer on worldwide cargo ships, and his travels took him to 75 countries. By age 30, Dave had been around the world seven times. He has worked as a Loss Prevention Specialist in the property insurance industry and as a Principal Risk Engineer for a chemical corporation. Dave is also President of his own public speaking and coaching business and a member of the National Speakers Association (NSA). He was a finalist in the 2004 World Championship of Public Speaking and is the recipient of many other public speaking awards. Dave, his wife Christine (a Canadian whom he met in Australia) and their two children live in Texas. To learn about Daves speaking programs, workshops and coaching, contact dave@davehillspeaks.com.
