

This is a book that contains words of wisdom, more specifically- sayings, handed down by African American grandparents, great-grandparents, and even great-great-grandparents. It is to be enjoyed by all ethnic groups because for generations grandparents, great-grandparents, and those adopted as grandparents played important roles in the lives of countless grandchildren. For this book, the term grandparents will be used for great-grandparents, great-great-grandparents and others we have adopted as our grandparents.. Many of us remember the hours, days, months, and often years in the presence of grandparents who seemed to have all the answers to life and living. If you or someone you know had such an experience, you would probably remember or be told of the warnings or encouragement given by those affectionately called (just to name a few), Grandmother, Grandfather, Big Mama, Big Daddy, Granddaddy, Paw Paw, Gramma, Grampa, or MaDea. They were wise and earnestly attempted to guide us in making the best decisions for our lives. There were times when we listened and times when the words went right over our heads but somehow, when we came of age, we understood, repeated, and more often than not, followed their advice. Some sayings in this book will be familiar and bring back memories. Others will be unfamiliar. Today, some may appear to be negative. That shouldn't stop you from enjoying each chapter and at the end of the last chapter please add your own words of wisdom.
