

Environmental Laws

The book entitled Environmental Laws concerns with trans-boundary problem of environmental pollution. So within the framework the purpose is to show how the law and judiciary have struck a balance between environment and development in India. The development and the protection of environment are not enemies. It is possible to carry on development activities applying the principle of sustainable development. A balance has to be struck. In such matters, many a times, the option to be adopted is not very easy or in strait-jacket. If development activity is allowed to go ahead unabated, there may be irreparable damage to the economic interest of the nation. However, in case of doubt, protection of environment should have precedence over the economic interest. The expanding interaction of society with nature is so extensive that environmental question has assumed proportions affecting all humanity. Rapid industrializations, expanding urbanization, explosion of population, over exploitation of natural resources, depletion of traditional resources of energy and raw materials, disruption of natural ecological balances, lack of Environmental Education, unawareness of consequences of Environmental Degradation, destruction of multitude of animals and plants species for economic reason or for no good reason, changed agricultural practices, extremely neglected and filthy civic amenities and modern of luxury are some of the factors which are mainly responsible for Environmental Degradation. Poverty is the fundamental cause which makes people to over exploit the natural resources of the country for meeting their basic needs, for employment, for shelter, for fuel and fodder for their cattle. Poverty and need are indeed the greatest polluters, It is recognized widely that population growth is essentially the result of poverty and lack of education. Governmental awareness of environmental issues is evident. The earliest laws aimed at controlling air pollution were the Bengal Smoke Nuisance Act of 1905 and Bengal Smoke Nuisance Act of 1912. In 1912 the Central Government enacted a broader Wild Birds and Animal Protection Act. The River Boards established under the River Boards Act of 1956 for the regulation and development of inter-state rivers and river valleys were empowered to prevent water pollution. Environmental regulation got fresh impetus after the UN Conference of Human Environment in 1972. Consequently, a National Committee on Environmental Planning and Co-ordination (NCEPC) was established as an apex advisory body on all environmental matter. On the recommendations of the Tiwari committee, a separate department of environment was established at the Centre on November 1.
