

RG III Redskin: Trivia & Fans say so long to a QB doomed from the start (Fan Trivia)

Robert Griffin was a college sensation, a football player with outstanding skills talent and what appeared to be a bright future in a national league for football greats. Yet since his 2012 debut in the national league his career has been laced with one after another obstacle and downfall. Was it planned this way from the start? One week before his 2012 Rookie season opening game G. Hooker (Author of: * 6 NFL Teams going all the way in 2012 *) co hosted an internet radio show in Las Vegas, Hooker predicted that Griffin would be an NFL disappointment. History has a line of African-American QB who should have been outstanding players in a game dominated with minorities. Yet the list is full of players who failed to produce as expected. Is this pattern of failure due to over-hype of a player? Is it a matter of too much success, too soon in a young players life? Or is there another agenda at work? Are African-American Quarterbacks selected an hyped with the intention of being made a failure? Is there a secret plot to earn millions off someone doomed from the start? Are sports doctors paid to give a passing medical approval to young men who should not be allowed on the field. Considering the fact that games are set prior to draft, are insiders setting up offense players to face worst defense in league so as to easily cash in with huge gaming bets. Is there ever a fix in professional sports? How did Hooker accurately predict RGIII would be a huge let down, at a time when millions were hailing his arrival? Why did Hooker predict - on air- that RGIII would suffer a concussion in week 6 or 7 of his rookie year? - The concussion prediction came true in week 5 against a defense team known for dirty play.
