

Then There Were None: Chinese Demand for Critical Materials in the Coming Decades

Then There Were None: Chinese Demand for Critical Materials in the Coming Decades is a study of how surging Chinese demand for many of the worlds most critical materials will be met by domestic and international suppliers over the coming decades. The supply/demand scenarios for twenty different materials like gold, platinum, lithium and the rare earths are examined and some projections are made regarding how Chinese demand will affect these critical materials going forward. In the concluding chapter the author theorizes about which critical materials may actually become depleted over the next two decades.
