

Riding the Waves: The Price of Fame and Fortune

Tracey was sick and tired of living in the shadows of her famous parents- music mogul, Connie Cat Morris, and NFL Hall of Fame legend, Vernon Jet Michaels. Growing up, Tracey had the best of everything- designer clothes, cars, jewelry, and extravagant parties. Tracey was all about that life, but having riches wasn't enough for her, she wanted to see her own name on the Hollywood Walk of Fame. After having a mediocre acting career, Tracey hires a new agent who persuades her to write a tell-all book that would expose her family and ex-lovers' darkest secrets, including those of Hollywood's bad boy, B-Money. Tracey's book becomes an international best-seller, but not without a price. Her brother Devin could end up in jail, B-Money threatens murder, and Tracey finds herself on the verge of losing the only man she's ever loved. With a ten million dollar offer on the table to film a movie, Tracey must decide if she'll accept the deal, and sail off into the sunset or give it all up to save her family. EXCERPT: Tracey, you really don't care about building a legacy, because you believe a legacy is based on money and fame. You'll never know what it's really like to be a Boss unless you've built your career from scratch. You always wanted the good parts of my life, but it's the bad parts that made me resilient. You weren't there during the come up, because you were just a child who had everything handed to you. Now you're running back to me so I can fix this monster you created, Connie shook her head in disgust. Well honey, you need to figure this one out yourself. That's part of being a boss, Connie snatched up her purse, slung it over her shoulder, and stormed out of the office.
