

The Boy Who Was Afraid of Monsters: Understanding Children Series 1

FEAR OF MONSTERS! Do you know children who worry and cant sleep at night? They may be afraid of MONSTERS but cant tell anyone! Get a better understanding of this very common childhood fear See effective ways of relating, listening and speaking to children

The Boy Who Was Afraid of Monsters This is the story of Charlie Healy whose life is quite perfect. Except for one thing. He has an enormous, silent fear of a monster. The arrival of the dreaded Scartledder in Charlies life, the most fearful monster of them all, had been unexpected and abrupt. He feels very alone in his fear, believes he could never admit it to anybody, even to say the word aloud seems dangerous. The Boy Who Was Afraid of Monsters tells the story of how Charlie came to understand his fear of monsters and of how the adults around him found ways to understand and communicate with him, transforming Charlies fear in the process. The Boy Who Was Afraid of Monsters is the second story in Understanding Children Series 1, a research-based, accessibly-written series of stories for adults to read with children, or for children to read themselves. The stories give the reader a better understanding of childrens common fears and anxieties, model good ways of relating, listening and speaking to children, provide practical ideas about how (and how not!) to communicate with children, especially about their fears and anxieties. The stories deal with fears and anxieties about a range of subjects including monsters, dogs, conflict, body image and Santa Claus. The communication strategies in the stories, however, are relevant to any topic or issue. Workbooks, seminars and online courses also available. Further details from greenbikebooks@gmail.com
